Excerpt: . 219 chapter vii. the session of 1812. 1811-1812. How Perceval achieved Success--Seeds of Schism in the Administration--Lord Wellesley--Expiration of the Regency Restrictions--Debts of the Prince Regent--The Regent's Establishment--Correspondence of Lord Wellesley and Per-ceval--Meeting of Parliament--The Regent's Speech--Wellesley Pole's Change of Opinions--State of Ireland--Lord Wellesley's Resignation--Perceval's Conduct of the War in the Peninsula--Letter from Lord Wellington--The Catholic Question--Wellesley Pole's Memorandum--Resignation of Charles Yorke--Overture to Lords Grey and Grenville--Official Rearrangements--Defence of Sinecures. The Session of 1811 was, beyond question, the most eventful period of Perceval's career. When it had opened he was generally regarded as a falling Minister, with a formidable majority to contend with in the House, and a Regent to whom he was personally and politically offensive. Before the Session was six weeks old he was more powerful in the House of Commons than any Minister...
